Little Red wore his red hood every single day, in a cottage at the edge of the forest.

One morning, Grandmother felt poorly. Mother packed a basket of cake and jam.

“Stay on the path,” said Mother,
“and do not talk to strangers.”

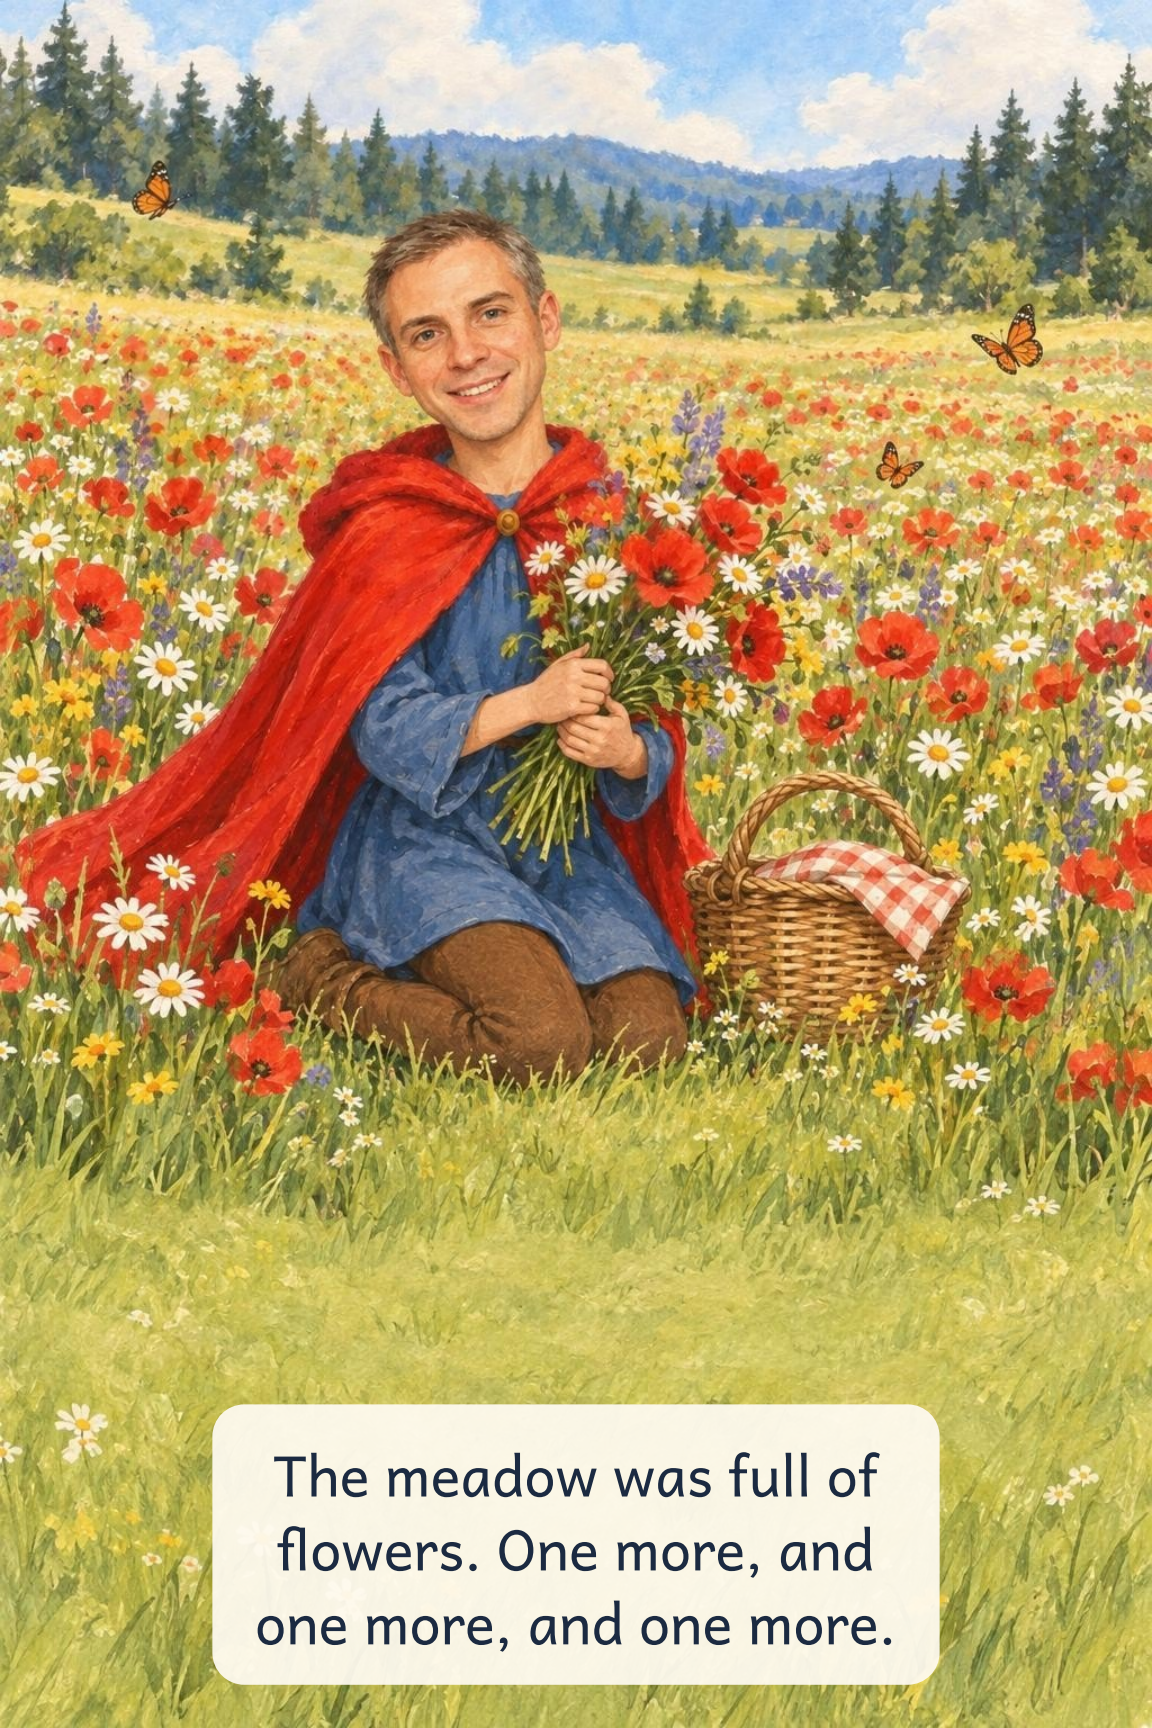

Deep in the forest, a wolf stepped out. “Where are you going?” he asked.

“To Grandmother's,” said Little Red. “Then pick her some flowers!” said the wolf.

So Little Red left the path,
and the wolf raced on ahead.

The meadow was full of flowers. One more, and one more, and one more.

At last Little Red hurried on, over the stream and past the tall pines.

Grandmother's door stood open. That was strange.

“Come in, my dear,” called a strange, growly voice.

The wolf had got there first!
Grandmother hid in the wardrobe,
and he climbed into her bed.

“Grandmother, what big ears you have!” “All the better to hear you with.”

“What big eyes you have!” “All the better to see you with.”

“What big teeth you have!” “All the better to EAT you with!”

Out of bed sprang the wolf! Little Red ran for the door, shouting for help.

Round the garden they raced, with the wolf snapping at the basket.

A woodcutter heard the shouts and came running. “Be gone, wolf!” he cried.

The wolf ran off and was never seen again. Out of the wardrobe came Grandmother.

They all shared the cake, and Little Red always stayed on the path. The End.
